History

Hand bells made entirely of brass have been crafted for centuries, serving practical purposes in homes, schools, churches, and public establishments. This style of bell, with its turned brass handle and bell body, became particularly common in the mid-20th century, often manufactured in India and other regions known for brass metalwork. These bells were used for calling servants, announcing meals, signaling in schools, or as decorative pieces.

Solid brass hand bells appeal to collectors of vintage household items, antique bells, and brass decorative objects. They are valued for their craftsmanship, warm patina, clear resonant tone, and nostalgic charm. Bell collectors and enthusiasts of traditional
